

Please do not make any attempt to alter the New Jersey Do Not Call laws that are currently in effect (or any other state for that matter). I think the numbers speak for themselves. Two out of every three residential phone lines in our state is registered on the Do Not Call list. This should tell you how strongly people feel about receiving harrassing telemarketing calls at home, at any time of the day or night. The program has been a huge success. Why would you attempt to weaken or dismantle a well-oiled machine? There are other ways to do business that don't interfere with people's quality of life. Let the telemarketers find other ways of doing business.
